

FIND BODY OF CASH BOY, KIDNAPPED IN FLORIDA ON MAY 29TH, NEAR THE SPOT WHERE RANSOM MONEY WAS PAID

Franklin Pierce McCall, 21, Former Boarder in Boy's Home, Leads G-Men to Spot in Orchard—Federal Men Refuse
To Implicate McCall Further in the Crime—
"No Comment," is Statement

(By International News Service)

MIAMI, Fla., June 9—A young native Floridan early today led G-men to the brutally-slain body of Jimmy Cash after confessing a major role in the child's $10,000 kidnapping.

They found all that remained of the 5-year-old child in a crumpled heap under an orchard tree less than a mile from the spot at which his father paid the ransom in vain a week ago.

The guide was Franklin Pierce McCall, 21, a former boarder in the Cash home at Princeton, 25 miles south of here.

J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, announced McCall admitted writing the three ransom notes delivered to James B. Cash, Sr., and accepting the ransom money.

He refused, however, to implicate McCall further in the crime and merely added, "No comment," when pressed as to whether the youth had been involved in the actual kidnapping or murder.

But the chief of the G-men said all the ransom money had been recovered in a hole at the corner of the orchard that McCall had pointed out.

As a result, the belief grew that the young man had been at least the ring-leader in the crime if it was not, indeed, a one-man job.

The unexpected break in the case came suddenly. A hint of what might be in the wind spread only an hour before four carloads of roughly-clad G-men carrying shovels hustled their prisoner out of the headquarters of the F. B. I. here and sped away toward Princeton.

McCall, they said, directed them without hesitation to the orchard of Carl Chambers and led the way without faltering among the fruit trees.

Flashlights picked out the form of the curly-headed child there still clad in the pajamas he was wearing when snatched from his bed on the evening of Saturday, May 29. Tipping over a rock nearby, G-men found the crushed cardboard box in which the ransom had been paid.

Hoover said the child's body was badly decomposed and indicated he had been dead for at least a week, being killed shortly after if not before James B. Cash, Sr., handed over the $10,000 early last Tuesday in a vain attempt to obtain the safe return of his only child.

In that he was doomed to the same disappointment that has been the bitter fate of other parents and relatives of kidnap victims in the past few years. There was baby Charles A. Lindbergh, 16-year-old Charles Mattson, Peter Levine, 12, and the elderly Charles S. Ross of Chicago, all of whom were slain by their abductors during ransom negotiations.

Hoover said the boy's body was in such a bad state, it was hard to tell the exact manner in which he had been done to death and an autopsy was ordered as soon as the body was returned to a mortuary in Miami. A cursory examination indicated, however, that he had been choked and struck on the head with some heavy weapon.

Summoning newsmen to his office upon their return, Hoover made an informal statement. Without sleep himself for nearly 48 hours, he plainly showed the effects of the strain and spoke in nervous jerky sentences. He was still wearing boots and breeches he had donned in the hunt for the boy's body.

McCall, Hoover stated, became acquainted with the Cash family three summers ago and boarded at their house in 1937 and the early Spring of this year during the tomato picking season when he worked in the fields.

He had been employed as a roadman for the State Highway Department from June of 1937 to October and thus developed an intimate knowledge of the vicinity of Princeton and probably accounted for the intricately designed maps on the ransom notes detailing the method of payment.

Now married, the prisoner and his wife had lived at the Cash home until a comparatively few weeks ago when they moved to the cottage of one "Red" Lambert, according to Hoover.

The house is at the intersection of Tallahassee road and Sunset avenue, and only a few yards from the spot at which Cash, Sr., dropped the box of Members of Perkasee Borough Council devoted a part of their time to discussing a proposition relating to providing certain sections of the borough with sewer service.

This matter was brought up by Robert H. Grim, secretary of the Perkasee Board of Health, who stated that the health authorities in the town had received many complaints relative to the running of water and even sewage into the gutters. Sewer lines in the borough are owned by the Perkasee Sewer Company and this company feels that it does not have sufficient funds to extend the sewer lines at present.

Only about half of the properties in the first and second wards have sewer service, and if the proposition considered by Council is carried out, other properties not having this service will be connected.

Council proposes to build the line, collect rentals from persons on the line and then pay the Perkasee Sewer Company for the disposal of the sewage. The proposed line would be connected with the main line of the Perkasee Sewer Company.

DISCUSS ZONING OF BUCKS COUNTY

Meeting of Real Estate Board and Others Interested Held at Washington Crossing

TO SEE COMMISSIONERS

WASHINGTON CROSSING, June 9—In an effort to protect and preserve the natural beauty of Bucks County, representatives of the Bucks County Commissioners, heads of civic groups, Boy Scout, Federation of Women's Clubs, farmers' clubs, grange, Delaware Valley Protective Association and representatives of the Urbanites now residing in the County, met last night to discuss and consider plans for zoning Bucks County.

The meeting was sponsored by the Bucks County Real Estate Board and was held at Washington Crossing Inn. It is planned to request the Bucks County Commissioners to appoint a planning board which will have the authority to zone Bucks County. Discussion of the project followed a dinner.

The meeting adopted a motion authorizing the chairman of the meeting to name a committee of seven to meet with the County Commissioners to discuss the subject.

The guest speaker was Francis Pitkin, Director of the Pennsylvania State Planning Board. Greetings were extended to the group by Ralph D. Schlachter, president of the Bucks County Real Estate Board, who in turn presented Mrs. Martha S. Woolley, chairman of the publicity committee.

Mr. Woolley in her introductory remarks referred briefly to the meaning of planning and zoning and said, "Let us zone Bucks County before it is too late, and preserve some of its beauty." She then introduced Mr. Pitkin, the guest speaker.

Mr. Pitkin told of his ride through Bucks County enroute to the meeting and stated that he hoped that the matter of planning and zoning idea would not be dropped after the meeting of the evening. "Bucks County has unmatched beauty and resources," he said, "but there have been changes during the past 19 years. I would like to live in Bucks County," said the speaker.

"We who love beauty destroy it, and we who value property destroy property." He explained this statement by stating that without thought or planning the beauty of communities are destroyed and hence the value of property is lessened.

"We need auto graveyards and we need pigeries; we need high speed highways; truck routes and gas stations. But there is a place for them. We need industrial development but

IT DID NOT HAPPEN

The failure of the Nazi putsch into Czechoslovakia to materialize invites the obvious interpretation that Hitler backed down in the face of the determined attitude assumed by France and England. If so, this is proof in itself of the widely held contention that a firm stand by democratic Europe at any time in the last four years might have sufficed to face down dictatorial Europe and whereby have saved the world a lot of trouble.

The objection to this version of the last few days' events is principally that it is too obvious to be plausible. Before it can be said that Hitler was balked, it must be proved he was up to something to be balked in. Apparently the belief was strong in London and Paris on Saturday night that this was so, but as events turned out there was hourly less and less to justify the French and British fears.

The best argument against the supposition that Hitler was on the verge of a Czechoslovakian coup is the fact that it did not happen. Mr. Hitler is no creature of routine but it is very doubtful he would attempt so difficult a feat without at least a thorough preparation as that made for his Austrian coup.

Those who recall how Vienna newspapers, for example, did not miss even an issue by their transfer to Nazi control hardly will deny that the Austrian preparations were thorough indeed. It is evident, however, that so detailed a plan or plot simply could not be called off at the eleventh hour, as was assumedly the case in Czechoslovakia. Once in motion, it would have to move ahead or, if checked, certainly could not be suppressed in all its ramifications before its existence in some way was betrayed.

The chances, we should say, are a hundred to one that no Czechoslovakian coup was planned or even dreamed of. That proposition is probable in itself, with no more corroboratory evidence than that inherent in the character of the undertaking. Czechoslovakia is no Ethiopia, nor yet even an Austria. If Mr. Hitler is considering more coups with which to beguile his people, we would look rather to Memel and Lithuania as the likeliest objects of his attentions. The tough little republic that surrounds the Skoda munitions works, we should put, at least, very far down on the list.

WATCHFUL CITIZENS

Further evidence of close interest in public affairs in quarters in which such concern hitherto has been an unsuspected is found in reports from the conference in Pittsburgh of the Associated Junior Leagues of America. The delinquents and young nations of the Junior Leagues for years have been energetic in many activities for their own enjoyment and for the benefit of the underprivileged; politics and legislative halls are for them a new domain.

The young women of the Junior League, says the executive secretary of the national association, are dedicated to the task of enlightening themselves and aiding in the over-taking of the cultural lag in their communities; they are asked to cherish the spirit of liberalism, to recognize the right of the minority to dissent, and to insist that the decision of the majority shall govern. And they are further urged to take an active and watchful part and a definite stand in the making of the nation.

The Great Game of Politics

the administration of relief money found to be using his position to influence an election. Senator Hatch is a New Deal friend of the President, but entirely aside from that one certainly would have the right to expect support for that kind of proposal from the President. In fact, unless the purpose is to play politics with money provided to relieve human need it is difficult to conceive of a sound reason for withholding support. Support, however, was not only withheld, but the amendment killed by White House votes.

SECOND, there was the amendment of Senator Lodge, which sought to prevent favoritism and discrimination in the allotment of relief funds to the several States. Mr. Lodge's proposal was to have the money distributed in proportion to the number of unemployed, as shown by the Social Security figures and other statistical agencies. The idea was to give the distribution a definite relation to the amount of unemployment, and thus prevent a Senator with big political pull getting a larger slice for his State than justified by the number of jobless.

THIRD, there was the Holt amendment, which merely proposed, by extending the merit system to the non-policy-forming officials of the WPA and PWA, to carry out a definite pledge in the 1936 Democratic platform. This amendment was not only in accord with the platform pledge but in accord with the letter written by Mr. Roosevelt to Vice-President Garner on June 2, 1937. Yet the President's friends overwhelmed it. And finally there was the Austin amendment, which would have made it unlawful for any person whose compensation comes from relief funds to solicit or authorize to be solicited any contribution to any political party from relief workers.

IT SEEMS a little hard to invent a convincing reason for opposing any one of these four amendments. By killing them all, Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal clearly are on record—

First, in favor of keeping politics in relief;
Second, against a fair distribution of the money to the States according to their unemployment needs;

Third, against relieving WPA and PWA jobholders from fear of dismissal for political reasons;

Fourth, against the protection of men on the relief rolls from assessments for political purposes by agents of political committees.

When it is considered that no lower form of electioneering has ever been known than that with relief funds, this is about as dreadful an indictment as could be made by any administration. Yet, if there is any other interpretation to put upon the rejection of these four amendments it would be interesting to hear it. Certainly none was offered. If it can be gotten home to them, the record as it stands ought to stir people pretty deeply.

PROBABLY it means an increased number of anti-New Dealers in the next Congress. The opposition is certainly presented with an issue in June which should keep the New Deal on the defensive not only through the November elections but through 1940. Administration politicians frankly count upon the weight of these unrestricted expenditures to offset the unfavorable reaction. It is, of course, impossible to know now whether the money will outweigh the resentment, but at least the facts ought to end the mockery of the New Deal pretense of purity.

"CONTRABAND" by Dennis Wheatley

CHAPTER XXXII

The Chief Constable's party turned inland along the bank, toward Hook Quay, making a detour to avoid passing within sight of the new brick cottage which the local inspector had described, and arriving just before ten o'clock at the cluster of empty sheds.

It was dark now, and producing their torches once they were inside the ramshackle buildings, the police made a thorough investigation of them.

They were quite empty but showed signs of recent use. Their windows had been boarded over so that no lights could show and gaps in the wooden walls had been pasted over with brown paper. The earthen floors showed marks where heavy cases had been thrown down upon them and in two of the larger sheds cartwheel tracks were visible.

"It looks as if they work things differently here and store stuff instead of getting it away immediately," Wells remarked.

"Perhaps local farm carts come along later to collect it. The carts probably deliver the goods to some other depot on the west end of the island, south of Queenborough, where it would be easy to transfer them to the railway with so much freight traffic passing from the docks there up to London."

Gregory drew Rudd outside and into a smaller shed nearby where they were quite alone together. Kneeling down on the floor he spread out his map and shone his torch upon it.

"See where we are now—Hook Quay?" he said in a low voice.

"Yes sir," muttered Rudd.

"Right. Think you can find your way back to the village?"

"Easy. Straight up the track that leads from here. Cross the railway at the grade crossin'. Turn right along that road south of the one we come to Eastchurch by for half a mile and there we are. Simple as apple pie."

"Good lad," Gregory patted his arm affectionately. "Now I want you to fade out when no one's looking. Go back to Eastchurch, collect the car, and drive it to the farm marked Old Hook on the map. That's just half way up the track between these sheds and the railway. I don't let you bring it nearer in case the people here catch the sound of the engine, send a man to investigate, and finding it's my car tumble to what I'm up to. When you reach Old Hook turn the car round and park it at the roadside, facing north, ready for an instant getaway. If one of the local coppers who're playing hide and seek all over the countryside tonight ask what you're up to just say you're acting on Superintendent Marrowfat's orders. We must risk their disbelief you and coming over to report. When you're through, leave the car and join me here again to let me know everything's all right. That clear?"

"You bet it is. I'll be back under the hour sir."

Rudd slipped out of the hut and vanished in the darkness. Gregory folded up his map and rejoined the others. Just outside the largest shed Wells was standing peering down at the small wharf which jutted out from the bank into the sluggish stream.

"What about having a quiet look at that cottage the local man mentioned," Gregory suggested, coming up behind him.

Wells nodded. "Right. It's very unlikely anything will happen for an hour or more, so we've plenty of time."

The two left the shed together and made their way cautiously along the bank of the creek. Six hundred yards from the sheds they came round a sharp bend and saw a light directly ahead a little way in front of them.

"That'll be it," muttered Gregory. "I'll bet whoever lives there is in this thing."

Picking their way carefully they approached nearer to the small two-story house. It had no garden, only a back yard filled with rubble that the builders had left, and no road or lane led to it. The light came from a

"I'd lay any money that Gavin built this place," Gregory went on, "and I'm pretty sure I can tell you where he picked this site, well away from either of the lanes, too."

"All right, let's hear your theory," Wells whispered.

"The sheds at Hook Quay are round the bend of the creek so no light shown there could be seen for more than five hundred yards down stream. That's probably why Gavin chose it as the actual landing place, but it has one drawback, they can't signal from it. Now this place is right on the bend of the river. A light in the upstairs room of the house, on its far side, could be seen for five miles at least, right down at the entrance of the Swale. That's how they signal to the incoming fleet of luggers that the coast is clear, or if there are any suspicious looking people about, and the smuggler boats had best hang off for a bit."

"That's sound enough, I see they have a telephone, too," Wells remarked, jerking his head toward a stout pole only a yard away from them. "That in itself is suspicious; seeing it's only a jerry-built place miles from anywhere. It must have cost them quite a bit to get a line brought down from Eastchurch Station; far more than ordinary people who lived in a little place like this could afford."

They were crouching behind a pile of debris, left by the builders, about thirty yards from the cottage. "I wish we could get near enough to look in at that window," Gregory said thoughtfully; but Wells shook his head.

"Too risky. If they spotted us they'd be on the telephone to warn their pals the game was up before we could get inside. Now we've seen all there is to see I think we'd best get back to the others."

In one of the sheds Sir Pellinore, the Chief Constable, Marrowfat and the rest, were gathered, seated on the dry earth floor busily engaged in eating a picnic supper. Producing their own packets of sandwiches Gregory and Wells joined them.

At eleven o'clock they switched off the shuttered electric lamps and brought with them. The Chief Constable and his party remained seated in the darkness of the shack, except Marrowfat, who went out to check the final dispositions of the Special Squad men he had brought with him from the Yard. One of these sat in the doorway with a box-like apparatus before him and a pair of telephone receivers clamped over his ears. It was a small portable wireless set.

Soon after Marrowfat had left them Gregory got up and strolled outside. He waited for a little on the edge of the wharf keeping a watchful eye upon the end of the track to landward. He was desperately impatient now for something to happen, so that he could submerge his gnawing anxiety for Sabine in the necessity for action, but he scarcely moved a muscle when a familiar figure sidled up to him out of the darkness.

"All present and correct, sir," came Rudd's husky mutter.

"Fine. Keep close by me from now on and be ready to bolt for the car the second I do," Gregory turned and walked slowly back to the shed with Rudd beside him.

As reports came through that the various forces on the north Kent coast and in the island of Sheppey had taken up their positions, the man at the wireless spoke in a low voice to a stenographer who sat beside him, his pad held under a box-lamp in light. Before eleven most of the hand contingents had already reached their stations and the river police now reported themselves ready at their rendezvous by the Ham Fishery Buoy.

At length a message came through from the river police. Their sound detectors had picked up the motor engines of a numerous convoy moving in the direction of Clite Hole Bank north east of Herne Bay. A little later another report gave the convoy as directly south of them, off Pollard Spit at the mouth of the East Swale, and the river police stated that they were now moving in.

At a quarter to twelve the little glers must be entering Windmill Creek itself; then a message came through from the river police that they had closed the mouth of the Swale and were running up it.

Five minutes later a report came by wireless from another police post, a mile away at the entrance of the creek, that a fleet of six motor barges were proceeding past them at that moment without lights. The Superintendent's party stirred into activity.

"They may land here," Gregory said in a low voice to Wells, "but the center of the trouble's going to be at that cottage. Let's get down there."

"We've got it covered by a dozen men," Wells answered, "but I think you're right and I'd like to be in at the finish."

They put out their cigarettes and hurried along the bank. The light in the window of the cottage had disappeared, but they turned inland, skirting it at some distance and, on reaching its further side, saw that Gregory's surmise was proved correct. The upper window made an oblong of bright light; naked and uncurtained. The only thing that marred its symmetry was the outline of a black cat seated, apparently, upon the sill inside.

For a few moments Gregory watched the cat. It remained absolutely motionless and, as he was standing only about twenty yards from the window, he suddenly realized that it was not a cat at all; but a black silhouette in the form of a cat, either painted or stuck on the lower section of the window. It was a sign which would arouse no suspicion in a casual passerby but, with good glasses, it could probably be seen miles away down the river as a black outline against the rectangle of light. Obviously it was the signal to the smuggler fleet that all was well.

As he crouched there peering at it the soft, chug-chug-chug of motor engines came to him out of the darkness from the river. He crouched lower, pulling Wells down beside him, so that their forms should not be visible against the skyline. Rudd, just behind them, was already on his knees.

Six large motor barges chugged swiftly by and rounded the corner of the stream.

"Will Marrowfat pounce on them the moment they land?" Gregory whispered.

"No," Wells whispered back. "He'll give them a chance to unload some of their cargo, at all events, and wait until the river police close in behind them."

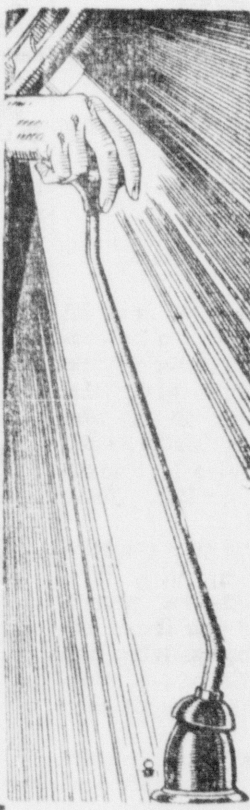

The noise of the motors died down, then ceased. Silence settled again over the low, apparently deserted stretch of country. It was broken only at intervals by the faint sound of men's voices, drifting on the night air, as the first barge was moored against Hook Quay and the others came up alongside it.

Wells and Gregory waited with what patience they could muster. The Inspector knew that one of his men was squatting ten yards away to their right, another down on the river bank to their left, and that a dozen more were hidden in the marsh grass close at hand all round. Touching Gregory on the elbow he began to make his way stealthily toward the creek where he took up a fresh position from which he could see the front door of the cottage.

They had hardly reached their new post when two men came along the little-used footway leading to the group of shacks. From the lower ground Gregory could see them in the faint dusky light sufficiently to recognize the taller of the two, who dragged his leg a little, as the Limper.

A new sound came from down the creek, the rapid throb of other, more powerful, motor boat engines. The Limper caught it at the same second as Gregory, and paused, silhouetted for a moment in the lighted doorway of the cottage, listening intently.

Suddenly the shrill blast of a whistle pierced the muted roar of the engines. Marrowfat, lying in wait behind the shacks, had heard the approaching police boats, as well, and sent his men into action.

TIMELY RECIPES

You Will Want to Try!

Spiced Ham Tenderloin
One ham tenderloin; one-half teaspoon each curry powder and ground ginger; four whole cloves; one tablespoon honey; two raw tart apples.

Place all ingredients in large cooker, which may be covered tightly. Cover with boiling water, cover until, and simmer for about three hours. Do not boil vigorously, as long slow cooking gives the flavor. Applesauce is a good side dish, or an apple dessert might wind up the meal.

Spinach Ring
One-half peck spinach; two tablespoons butter; two tablespoons flour; one-half cup milk; three eggs, separated; pepper and salt; one tablespoon grated onion; one-half teaspoon nutmeg (nutmeg may be omitted).

Wash the spinach several times, using warm water if it is gritty. Cook in salted water that half covers the spinach until tender, about 10 minutes. Drain, chop, or put through meat grinder. Heat butter, stir in flour, then the milk and cook over a low fire. When smooth and thick, stir gradually into the beaten yolks. Add spinach and seasonings.

Fold in the stiffly-beaten egg whites, place in a well-buttered ring mold and place in a pan half-filled with boiling water. Bake 20 minutes in a moderate oven, 375 degrees F., or until set. When ready to serve, loosen edges, and turn carefully on a hot platter. This may be served with sliced, hard-cooked eggs, or a creamed vegetable, or meat may be placed in the center. Either cream meat, or fish, are delicious.

"Big Apple" Sundae
The popularity of the "Big Apple" has spread to an ice cream treat, which was announced recently at a convention of ice cream dealers in Seattle, Wash. Make the latest sundae thus:

A big dipper of vanilla ice cream, a coating of apple-jellied syrup, a scoop of apple sauce, and, over all, a slice of cinnamon-treated apple, a huff of whipped cream and a maraschino cherry.

Scrambled Eggs
This dish guarantees "sunshine" even on a cloudy day, for egg yolks are an important source of Vitamin D. Twelve egg yolks; four whites; one-half cup whole milk; one tablespoon butter; one teaspoon salt; one-half green pepper.

Beat eggs slightly, add milk and salt and pepper to taste. In the top of the double boiler melt the butter, add finely-chopped pepper and cook a few minutes. Then add beaten eggs and stir constantly until they are soft and creamy. Cooked by this method, scrambled eggs will never be tough. The green pepper may be omitted.

Cucumber Salad
One cup grated cucumber; one cup chopped celery; two tablespoons vinegar; one-half teaspoon salt; one package prepared lime gelatin; one-half cup boiling water; one-half cup cold water.

Grate the cucumber, from which seeds have been removed. Add celery, vinegar and salt. Dissolve gelatin in boiling water. Add cold water. When slightly thickened, add cucumber and celery mixture. Pour into chilled individual molds. Place in refrigerator until firm. Unmold and garnish with greens. Six portions.

POPULAR SHORTCAKE HAS MANY VERSIONS

Now is the time when all good men like to swoop down upon a mountainous shortcake—not a dainty, individual portion, with a few perfect berries arranged around it, but a real shortcake feast.

Mince and apple pie, or pumpkin pie, may lead the race for Winter dessert favorites—with plum pudding capturing the holiday vote, but strawberry shortcake floats into the lead in April and keeps ahead straight through home-grown berry season.

Some families prefer their shortcake baked in layers, rich with berries and whipped cream, and others hold out for the individual biscuits, split open and buttered. Regardless of the method, it is advisable to serve an extra bowl of sweetened berries.

Now comes a de luxe method, which suggests baking the rich cake in a ring mold, filling the center with crushed berries and whipped cream.

and decorating the edge of the serving dish with whole berries. Here is the recipe:

Three and one-half cups sifted flour; five teaspoons baking powder; one-fourth cup sugar; one teaspoon salt; three-fourths cup shortening; two well-beaten eggs; one cup milk; two egg whites; one cup powdered sugar; one cup halved strawberries. Mix and sift flour, baking powder, sugar and salt. Work in shortening. Combine beaten eggs and milk and stir in quickly. Turn into greased ring mold and bake in hot oven, 400 degrees F., for 25 to 30 minutes. Instead of filling the center with sweetened berries, topped with whipped cream, try beating together the two egg whites, powdered sugar and strawberries until the mixture holds its shape. Fill the center of mold with this dainty strawberry meringue. Serve with extra berries.

Arrested and Fined For Fleeing from Accident Scene

as it sped away. Police in the Camden area immediately were notified to be on the alert for the car.

An hour later, police said, Motorcycle Patrolman Lawrence, at Burlington, saw the car, containing Schlip and a woman, Anna Bock, 56, approach the Burlington-Bristol bridge entrance.

Lawrence said he ordered the car to stop, but was rewarded by a burst of speed from the driver.

Both Schlip and the Bock woman were found in the wrecked car at Cornwells Heights, Schlip failing to make a turn where Station avenue comes to a dead-end at the intersection of route 513.

After being arrested by officers Riley and Dooner, criminal investigators of the Oxford Valley barracks of Pennsylvania Motor Police, Schlip was turned over to the Burlington officer. He later was given into custody of Camden authorities.

At a hearing in Camden this morning Schlip was fined $50, and sentenced to 30 days in the Camden County jail by Police Judge Gene Mariano. Schlip testified that he was not driving, and named as the driver a man named Kennedy. Schlip is said to have been very vague in court, however, about Kennedy. Schlip claimed that "Kennedy" left the car at Burlington. An agent for the New Jersey Vehicle Police stated he would ask Burlington police to place a drunken driving charge against Schlip, it being stated that "four Burlington police officers saw that Schlip was drunk."

The hearing was delayed until 9:30 upon request of Westcott. Officials state that during the delay period, which was granted, Westcott, whom it was claimed had no driver's license, rushed out and secured one. Westcott was then fined $15 for driving minus a license.

ransom money at a pre-arranged automobile headlight signal.

Hoover refused to say whether Lambert and McCall's wife had also been connected with the plot, but it was believed the three were the trio reported taken in custody several days ago. Hoover admitted McCall had been under questioning for more than two days before he broke.

McCall was born in Jasper, Fla., on March 31, 1917. His mother still lives there. A brother is said to be the pastor of a Nazarene church in Ft. Lauderdale.

A clean-cut, neatly-dressed young man, McCall had none of the appearance of a criminal and save for his extreme youthfulness might well have been mistaken for one of his college-trained captors.

Hoover's taciturn statement of the crime's nearly complete solution failed to include also, any reason for McCall's sudden craze for money after leading, as far as was known, a thrifty and hard-working life.

Checking all details of the story, however, left no doubt he was telling the truth, Hoover said. He had answered questions in an intelligent and cool manner indicating beyond doubt that he was sane. His handwriting appeared to be the same as that on the ransom messages.

LANGHORNE GIRLS WIN DUAL MEET OVER BRISTOL

LANGHORNE, June 9.—Trailing, 35-10, as late as the sixth event, Bristol High girls' track rallied, but it fell short of Langhorne's huge early lead which carried the latter through to victory over the Cardinal and Gray girls. The final count favored the "Squaws," 38-35.

Bristol scored a total of 20 points out of a possible 23 to come from far behind in cutting Langhorne's large early advantage, but it wasn't enough for them to come out on top in the dual meet held here yesterday afternoon. The meet, which was previously postponed three times, was finally run off when the weather man decided to let up with the sprinkling can to give the girls a "break."

Langhorne took five of the first places, four out of seven seconds, and one third; while Bristol came out on top in three events, took second in three others, and wound up with a sextet of third places. The Red and Blue lassies swept one event as did the wearers of the Cardinal and Gray colors. Langhorne scored all 9 points in the baseball throw while Bristol did likewise in the discus. However, Langhorne also scored heavily in two other events, capturing the first two scoring spots in both the high jump and basketball throw for 16 out of 18 points.

Leading Langhorne's scoring was Ann Biedka, who captured the County Class A girls' high jump in the annual B. C. I. M. She came home with a final total of 15 points, gaining first places in all three events she entered, namely the 75 yard dash, high jump, and standing broad jump. Florence Bruden scored eight points by taking a first in the baseball throw and second in the shotput.

For Bristol, only three girls scored all the points except for the relay team, which scored the last five tallies. Bristol chalked up Mary Yates as the pace-setter, counting ten points in winning the shotput, placing second in the standing broad jump, and third in each of the high jump and basketball throw. Thelma Johnson was second with 9 points. She captured one first, one second, and one third for her total, winning the shotput, finishing second in the discus, and placing third in the 75 yard run. The other six points Bristol scored individually were chalked up by Martha Gibson, who placed second in the 75 yard dash and third in each of the standing broad jump, discus, and shotput, for her total.

Esther Gotwald placed second twice for six points, the same number of points Betty Lenington gathered in. However, she counted hers on a first and third, while Betty Roberts counted the other three with a second in the high jump.

Bristol's relay team composed of Thelma Johnson, Doris Sutton, Esther Tomlinson and Martha Gibson, broke the tape in the quarter-mile run in 57 4-10 seconds which wasn't bad for a slow track. Bristol started out fast and each succeeding baton carrier widened the lead to carry the visitors to victory easily.

"EDDIE" BROWN JOINS ST. ANN'S BOXERS' LIST

A fast-stepping 126-pound fighter who is certain to please the amateur boxing fans of this section, has joined the St. Ann's A. A. stable of fighters. He is "Eddie" Brown, a little Irish youngster from Lambertville, Brown worked out in the St. Ann's "cym" last night and has convinced Matchmaker Johnny Straffe that he is in condition and is anxious to make his start here.

Brown is not a novice. He fought in the last tournament held in Trenton and reached the semi-finals only to be eliminated by Francis Bruno, who won the Jersey championship. Last season, Brown fought an exhibition bout with Tally Scarras, and was impressive in the three rounds that they were swinging at one another.

Straffe will attempt to book the Irish youth for the next show and if possible may get Jimmy Lefferts of the Ontario club to oppose him. Straffe is still trying to re-match Henry Varara, Roehling, with Pat Mattucci, Ontario.

These two boys gave a brilliant bout in the opening show and the fans have been clamoring for a return match. But Mattucci seems to have plenty of bouts lined up and it will be a hard job for Straffe to entice him from these matches.

The next show will be held in the St. Ann's outdoor arena, Monday night. Tickets will go on sale the latter part of this week.

The St. Ann's team looked like anything except league-leaders last evening on the Edgely diamond as it was swamped by the Odd Fellows nine, 9-6. It was the third defeat of the first half for the Saints and the sixth victory for the Oddies.

It was the youthful Pat McGahan who took the pasting from the Odd Fellows' bats. McGahan was no puzzle to the Oddies and was driven from the hill in the fifth. He was replaced by DeRisi who also came in for his share of the licking.

On the hill for the Oddies was Dave Ennis who pitched for the first time this season. Ennis was solved for three runs in the first and then settled down but in the final inning showed signs of weakness and before he could retire the side, three tallies had been pushed over the plate.

The Saints had seven hits to their credit while the winning aggregation mustered twelve off the two St. Ann's pitchers. Hal Snyder led the batters with a walk, single, and double in three trips to the plate.

CHOMA RETAINS LEAD WITH TWILIGHT STICK

By T. M. Juno

Although several players made big jumps in their batting averages in the Bristol Twilight League, "Pete" Choma, burly first-sacker of the St. Ann's nine, retained his batting lead with an average of .475, which is five points higher than his team-mate, Jole Heftman. In twenty-one official trips to the plate, Choma has delivered ten hits.

The surprising player of the circuit thus far, is Jole McCue, backstopper of the Superior Zinc. McCue has begun to hit the ball at a terrific pace and boosted his average to an even .400. He has made ten hits out of which were two doubles and four triples. He leads the league in the latter department.

"Mike" DeRisi, unbeaten hurler for the St. Ann's team, has won four games. He is also leading the pitchers in strikeouts with 31, two more than Sullivan, who has pitched in five games. DeRisi has a home run to his credit.

Cylindrical in shape, the chamber is about eight feet wide and high and approximately sixteen feet long, is made of reinforced concrete, and is covered with a thick layer of earth.

Some sage advice on what the Brown Bomber should do when he meets Max Schmeling in New York on June 22 seems to be the topic of conversation as Jimmie Braddock, former world heavyweight champion, consults with Joe Louis, his successor, at the latter's training camp at Pompton Lakes, N. J.

A larger type of shelter, erected for a girls' school and capable of housing between two and three hundred occupants, is in the form of a deep, zig-zagged trench, made of reinforced concrete, and constructed to a considerable depth below the surface. Entrance is gained from the school-

Public shelters in London and other large cities range from small chambers holding from a score to 50 people to quite elaborate affairs capable of housing several hundreds.

One in the heart of London, for example, close to Westminster Abbey and the House of Commons, is an elaborately equipped, tremendously strong affair.

Not only is there protection against splinters, but the shelter contains a gas decontamination plant and a system for maintaining pure air within, whatever the conditions outside.

Such shelters, however, are intended mainly for office workers or for pedestrians caught abroad at the time of an air raid.

Millions of others will seek their own funk holes—at home, in subways, beneath elevated railroad arches, in the basement of large buildings, or even in doorways.

For even the most optimistic Government expert is forced to admit that it would be an impossible task to get every one of London's more than seven million population, for example, into a safe shelter at the moment of a raid.

(Note: The third article in this series will describe the manner in which manufacturers are peddling various devices for sale to the public for air raid defense.—INS.)

not in residential sections. We need to advertise our products but not on billboards which will destroy the beauty of our highways and create traffic hazards."

Mr. Pitkin stated that the citizens of Bucks County have the legal authority to regulate all of these. He told of the enabling acts passed by the legislature which gives the township supervisors authority to zone and plan the townships and to the county commissioners the authority to zone and plan the county as a unit. He said that wise planning and zoning is highly technical but not expensive.

The meeting was then turned into an open forum and many of those present were called upon to give expression to their reactions to the project. Among these were:

tion of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Henry Arnold Todd, Doylestown, president of County Wayside Gardeners; A. Russell Thomas, representing Doylestown Kiwanis; George A. Hotchkiss, Doylestown Intelligencer; Thomas Ross, Esquire, Doylestown, spoke for Dr. A. J. Strathie, of Bucks County Boy Scout Council, who was called from the meeting; Russell Van Ness Black, noted engineer and authority on zoning (Mr. Black planned Princeton, N. J.); Col. Churchill Williams, Henry P. Bristol, Morris L. Cook, an outstanding engineer; Paul Neppes, representing the Farmers Club; A. Harvey Vasey, Solebury Grange; William Taylor, secretary of the Delaware Valley Protective Association; William Heinitsch, Philadelphia, who did outstanding work in planning Bowman's Hill Wild Flower Preserve; Frank Voit and Lester D. Thorne, Bristol Rotary Club.

Included among those attending were also: William B. Rosenberger, Doylestown Rotary Club; Tyson Nimnick; Miss Virginia Taylor, representing the Bucks County Times.

A short talk was also given by John Price Jones, New York City and Bucks County, an outstanding public relations councillor.
